project for the Bar Association. I just had the Association publicize the project through their newsletter, and the lawyers offered to be speakers.

The original plan was to have the speakers on the first and third Wednesdays give actual speeches and those on the second and fourth Wednesdays lead discussions with the students asking questions and debating the "Right of the Month." As it turned out, all of the speakers gave at least a short speech, and the students just raised their hands and asked questions whenever there was something in the speech on which they wanted more information. This really worked out best because the same students didn't come to every session. Also, the students were not at all bashful about asking questions. They enjoyed lively exchanges with the adults.

Because I knew that it might be difficult to get students very excited about spending a lunch hour a week discussing the Bill of Rights, I wanted a big-name speaker to launch the project and create interest. I wanted Nat Hentoff, author of several books and a national authority on censorship, to be my first speaker. I needed about $3,000 to bring Hentoff to Cheyenne, so I made a proposal to the School District committee that oversees our Federal funds for innovative grants. It was decided to include Central High, the other high school in the city, in the series to make the expenditure of funds cost-effective. Therefore, all speakers appeared at Central on Thursday noon.

It was also decided to videotape Mr. Hentoff's speech so that we would have a permanent product to show for the expenditure. The videotape did not turn out as well as was hoped. Due to an equipment malfunction, the video portion is great, but the audio has a lot of static. However, we did get a marvelous half hour tape of a student interview with Mr. Hentoff that covered many of the same points that he brought out in his speech.

The Wyoming Bicentennial Commission liked our program and paid Mr. Hentoff's air fare as their contribution to the project. The Laramie County Library paid for his overnight lodging in return for Mr. Hentoff's giving a speech at their Library in the evening. The Student Councils at East and Central paid for his meals while he was in Cheyenne. This cooperation reduced the cost to the School District slightly.

All the sessions were held in the Library at East and in a general meeting area at Central. Students and faculty were encouraged to bring their lunches and eat while they participated in the sessions. The speakers were warned that this would be the case.

Each high school did its own in-school publicity, attendance keeping records, and evaluation, so I can only speak for East on these points.

On the Tuesday and Wednesday mornings before each session, I had announcements on our Thunderbird television. We have ten minutes of live, in-house produced announcements every day. Every week before the sessions, I had either an announcement that I had written, or a student produced feature. The student produced features were better. I also put a flyer in all the teachers' mailboxes. I asked the teachers to bring the flyers to the attention of their students and remind them to come. Initially I went around to several teachers' classrooms and made a special presentation telling the students about the upcoming series and emphasizing the speakers' qualifications. I also spoke with the teachers and suggested to them that they might offer students extra credit for attending the seminars. Several teachers did offer extra credit, and one teacher required that all students attend at least one session. My main emphasis in these early talks was to get a large audience for the Hentoff speech. I also told the students that we had paperback copies of Hentoff's books for sale so they could have a copy for Mr. Hentoff to autograph while he was here. We sold 70 copies of his books, all we had ordered from a local bookstore.

Each time students came to a session, they were given a handout of court cases dealing with that week's right. They were also given an evaluation form. The students always filled out the evaluation forms, and I read every one of them. Some of their ideas were very useful to me, and most of the time I agreed with their assessments of the speakers. I was very pleased to read over and over again that the speaker had caused the student to think about what rights they have or to be more aware of their rights. As a general evaluation, I would most emphatically say that the sessions did what we wanted of them. They caused the students to THINK.

East had about 90 students and ten teachers attend the Hentoff speech. That was the big speech for which I had made the greatest effort to get a good audience. The next speaker after Hentoff, we had 16 students and five teachers. This was about what I had expected we would get for the less-well-known speakers. But I was pleasantly surprised when attendance at each subsequent session rose. We hit a high of 46 students and five teachers at one of the later sessions. This was really more than we could comfortably fit into the room, but it was gratifying to see so many interested in the series. We had a group of about ten or 12 students who came to nearly every session.

My personal assessment of the series was that it was a success. The students never failed to respond to the speakers, and both students and the speakers seemed to profit by the exchange. The students came away with a better understanding of the work world that these speakers came from, and the speakers seemed to be pleased with the students' attitudes and interest. The school got a lot of good publicity from the series. Thanks to the hard work of one of East's teachers, there was a story and a picture of the speaker in the local paper every week.

Libraries in Nicaragua, with a Commentary on Publishing

Libraries

In a country with a population and land mass similar to the state of Iowa (population three million), there are two working public libraries with total volumes of 150,000 in each

(there are actually an additional six to eight, but the materials are so badly catalogued that they are generally unusable at this stage).

As a rare book dealer, occasionally dealing in art, I had occasion recently to visit Nicaragua for almost three weeks. On that occasion to gather a "Naive" painting show through the offices of the Ministry of Culture. I took some time to go through the facilities around Managua (the capitol city), Granada and San Carlos (in the southern region).

In mid-February of this year, I went (along with a representative of the Ministry of Culture) to the Biblioteca Nacional. Set in a suburb of Managua (the downtown was so devastated in the earthquake of 1972 that it has never been rebuilt), the building is an unobtrusive stucco structure (not air conditioned) with shelves everywhere. I was shown through the general reference sections, the closed stacks, special collections and the cataloguing areas.

Of the 150,000 volumes in the library, none are circulating. Fully 90% of the materials I examined were in Spanish (most with Spanish or Mexican imprints). The English language materials are quite limited, most being in the reference sections. The materials are in very poor condition, with bindings practically nonexistent in some cases. With the tremendous heat and humidity, the leather backstrips don't seem to hold up very well.

Under the Somoza rulers, very little attention was paid to either the new or the old culture of the country. Since 1979 and the rise of the current government, great amounts of attention have been paid to all of the arts. A very large special collection has been built around the work of the poet Reuben Dario. Dario is not only the national poet, his work has influenced all of the Central and South American poets of stature. He was from Nicaragua. In the special collections area, there are over 3,000 volumes dealing with Dario, including most of the collected editions (in all of the countries in which he published), the first printings, biographical works and so on. Dario was a nationalist, hence has great significance for the Sandinistan government.

Through discussions with the librarians in Managua, I had only secondhand information on the other major library. The University Library in Leon has the same number of volumes as the Nacional. The bent is, of course, towards the academic with approximately 15% of the volumes in foreign languages (English, French, etc.). According to the academics that I spoke with in Granada, there is a good agricultural section, but generally, it is very poor in the natural sciences (much of the natural science research was conducted in the 19th Century by U.S. naturalists and published through the office of the Smithsonian or related institutions).

Much of the history of Nicaragua is intertwined with the United States. The first attempts at comprehensive mapping of the country came through the efforts of the U.S. Government to place an inter-oceanic canal through the country. The efforts started in 1846 and extended through 1901. The extensive maps of the southern half of the country were produced through the Isthmian Canal Commission of 1901, established by Congress to decide whether the canal should be located in Nicaragua or Panama. Most of the early travel accounts, in English, regarding Nicaragua are either narratives of the followers of William Walker (who invaded the country and declared himself "President") or of gold seekers to California who traveled via Cornelius Vanderbilt's steamship lines with a land crossing from Lake Nicaragua to the Pacific Coast where they were met by another Vanderbilt steamer for the trek to San Francisco.

Most of these published accounts of 19th Century Nicaragua are lacking in both major libraries, as are the many U.S. Government documents which report on the efforts of the U.S. Marines to capture the "bandit" Augusto Sandion through the 1920's and 1930's.

Nicaraguan accounts of some of the above mentioned history are beginning to appear, but research is limited; in many cases to the Historical Archives of the country located in Leon or in the Archives of Anastasio Somoza in Managua. The archives of the country are much better organized and accessible than the libraries, in part because they are so scanty. The materials of Anastasio Somoza include most of his correspondence, all of his public papers and the bulk of his notes available; yet, all of those materials are housed in a small single-story home in another suburb of Managua. It seems that dictators don't keep a lot of notes, public papers or letters. He ruled from 1967 to 1979.

Publishing

In 1979, with the fall of Somoza, the Sandinista party launched the first of their literacy campaigns. Under Somoza, adult illiteracy was 52%. Along with the literacy campaign came public education for both primary and secondary children. Education is now free of charge for the first six years. As a result of both of these reforms, the need for materials was intense.

Under the Ministry of Culture, regional presses were established. The basic materials for literacy are widespread and free of charge. A Miskito grammar and dictionary were commissioned and published. The Miskitos are the largest Indian tribe in the country.

Under Father Ernesto Cardenal (a Maryknoll priest who is the Minister of Culture and a first-rate poet), publishing is extensive in subjects, but limited in printing, through paper shortages, etc. While visiting the bookshops through Managua, I had occasion to spot everything from a translation of Carlos Baker's Hemingway in Cuba, to Cardenal's musings on Marilyn Monroe. There were volumes by some of the major poets of the country (Joss Coronel Urtecho, Daisy Zamora, etc.), essays by South American figures of stature (Vargas Llosa, etc.), children's works on folk music and so on. However, the distribution system of the presses seems to be haphazard at best. Of the four or five bookstores in Managua, they all seemed to have different books with none of the operators knowing what other books were available.

For the Future

In discussing the future of libraries, publishing and books with the head of "Foreign Relations" at the Ministry of Culture, there is much ahead.

A new restoration center is being established at the university in Leon for books and documents. A scientific lab is being funded through libraries in Holland to try and preserve the material now in decay.

An effort with Venezuela is just now beginning to purchase bookmobiles and get them stocked for the rural areas and smaller towns.

As for me, I've made a proposal to the national library to build a special collection on U.S. Government materials relating to Nicaragua. I will also be proposing to spearhead a drive for books for the public libraries of the country, that is, a drive for donated materials in Spanish to stock the new bookmobiles and proposed public facilities. I can't wait to go back.

Arizona Library Network Proposed

In order to promote greater sharing of library resources, the Arizona State Library Association has proposed formation of a multi-type library approach to resource sharing, the Arizona Library Network. This network would encompass and utilize the collections of all participating Arizona libraries and would maintain reciprocal borrowing agreements with similar networks, both state and regional, throughout the United States.

There is now a de facto Arizona Library Network comprised of libraries of all types which supports resource sharing through the following four components:

1. Arizona Interlibrary Loan Center. This is funded by the Department of Library Archives and Public Records using state funds and federal LSCA grants, and involves a contract with the Phoenix Public Library to house and operate the center. The AILLC serves as a central clearing house for all interlibrary loan requests from any library in the state.

2. Arizona Research and Information Center. This is funded totally with federal LSCA grants administered by DLAPR, who contracts with the Tucson Public Library to house and operate ARIC. ARIC is structured to provide in depth reference service to public libraries. A full range of research and referral services are provided.

3. Tools for Cooperative Bibliographic Access. There are several tools in the state that provide access to the holdings of participating Arizona

Library Building
Information Needed

This newsletter would like to feature information about recent, new or remodeled library building projects in the region.

Please send b & w photos, dedication brochures, floor plans and descriptive information to:

libraries. The bibliographic utilities (WLN, RLIN, and OCLC) indicate which books have been cataloged by member libraries. The SOLAR (Serials Online in Arizona) is building a union list of serial holdings using OCLC. The Arizona Numerical Register is microfiche listing of holdings in participating libraries.

4. Reimbursement for Net Lending. DLAPR currently reimburses the three state university libraries for lending more materials to other Arizona libraries than they borrow, using federal LSCA Title III grants.

The current Arizona Library Network is less than four years old and represents significant progress in resource sharing, however, it could and should be enhanced. ASLA recommends the following actions:

- Establish protocols for routing requests, based on size, location and type of library and also upon the availability of computerized tools to locate materials in other libraries.

- Develop and implement a legislative program designed to secure full state funding for all current Arizona Library Network resource sharing activities.

- Increase the number of libraries in Arizona using OCLC and explore means to load the holdings of non-OCLC libraries into OCLC.

- Conduct a survey to determine the accuracy and usefulness of the ANR.

- Promote greater awareness of existing resource sharing services through a comprehensive and ongoing series of publications and programs.

Proposed new components:

- Reimburse libraries that lend significantly more materials than they borrow through the network.

- Establish an efficient and economical system to move material and information among the libraries of the network.

- Investigate and encourage the use of cost effective advanced technology to promote resource sharing.

The ASLA Executive Board also adopted a recommendation that it should cooperate with the Arizona Library Friends, DLAPR, and the Department of Education to develop a legislative program which will result in the establishment of a commission which has the responsibility to plan and promote statewide resource sharing. (ASLA Newsletter, June 1987)

FIRST

FIRST, the new fee-based information service offered by the Arizona State University Libraries, has negotiated a $3,000 contract with the Arizona Educational Information System in the ASU College of Education. For fiscal year 1987/88, FIRST will be supplying copies of articles in the field of education to AEIS, which has contracts with sixty-nine educational agencies.

FIRST is currently creating a pool of candidates for both translation and research services. (Sound Off, July 13, 1987)

The Long Road to Conversion

The Phoenix Public Library has the distinction of being the first major public library to migrate from a first generation to a second generation automated library system. In 1983, Ralph Edwards announced that the library had received permission to proceed with the planning for a complete new automated system.

The shift from their ULISYS system to the current CLSI operation could serve as a model for other communities considering the same move. The effort included a variety of library and city department teams. (News and Views, June 1987)

Mesa Tribune to be Indexed

The Mesa Public Library has announced a long term project to index the Mesa Tribune from 1893 to present. The index will be entered into an IBM PC utilizing the FINDER software developed by Aaron/Smith Associates of Atlanta.

The project is funded by the Friends of Mesa Public Library from sales of gift books and will be completed in phases. The first phase is expected to last one year and will include approximately the first 10 years. (Mesa Public Library News Release)

Colorado

Boulder Foundation Mini-grants

Each year the Boulder Public Library Foundation awards a number of mini-grants to members of the library staff for the purpose of providing excellence in library services to the public. In times of tightened budgets, these grants become even more essential in allowing staff to maintain or provide programs and services.

One project for 1987 is Children's Librarian Judith Volc's summer programming. This foundation-supported programming allows the library to fill a gap left by this year's lack of funding for the schools' neighborhood libraries program. Volc also received another mini-grant to fund a Visiting Authors Program with the goal of inviting well-known authors to come to the library.

Other valuable public programs made available through mini-grants include an award to Lois Anderton of the Carnegie Branch for Local History to fund a program on "Colorado Pioneer Women"; a July film series entitled A Tribute to Charlie Chaplin; and two special series of concerts providing outdoor jazz concerts this summer and monthly brown bag lunch concerts in the fall.

The mini-grants also enhance the library's reference room collections through such projects as the Colorado History Index and the Colorado Business Index.

Filling in the gaps in Boulder's municipal government history is the goal of a two-year mini-grant awarded to Municipal Government Reference Center's Virginia Braddock.

Staff and patron needs for computerization have not been ignored in the '87 grants, with funding provided for the purchase of a computer in the Volunteer Services Department; an upgraded Macintosh computer for desktop publishing and an additional Macintosh for public use. The library foundation has been the sponsor of the Microcomputers for Public Use Program, which has provided patrons with a variety of computer hardware and software.

The 1987 mini-grants are one of the major channels through which the Boulder Public Library Foundation maximizes the library's human resources. By providing the means through which a staff member may better meet the public's library needs, the library foundation continues to make "excellence" at reality at BPL. (The Public Bridge, Summer 1987)

1990 Librarian Forecast

Virtually all librarian openings in Colorado are expected to rise from the need to replace those who stop working or transfer to other occupations, since employment growth is projected to be very slow through the 1990's. Employment growth in public libraries is likely to be slower than it has been in the last two decades, while little change is foreseen in school library employment and employment of academic librarians is expected to decline slightly. Opportunities are expected to be best for librarians with specialized knowledge in scientific and technical fields, including medicine, law, engineering, and the physical and biological sciences.

Colorado Employment:

Colorado Libraries Wins Award

Colorado Libraries, a quarterly professional journal published by the Colorado Library Association, is the 1987 recipient of the H.W. Wilson Library Periodical Award, administered by the American Library Association. Ingrid Schierling, head of technical services at the university library, University of Colorado at Colorado Springs, is the journal's editor.

Colorado Libraries was cited for its "thorough treatment of issues of general theoretical importance to the profession, as well as those of particular relevance to libraries in Colorado." The award, donated by the H.W. Wilson Company, consists of $500 and a certificate. (ALA News Release)

Dana Award to Denver Public Library

The Denver Public Library has received a John Cotton Dana Special Award for an exceptional library public relations effort for last year's Censorship Expo event.

The citation received by the Denver Public Library indicates that the award was given "for a creative and multifaceted series of programs and events revolving around a 'Censorship Expo' which helped to position the library as a pivotal community cultural organization."

Kansas

Topeka is Tops With Large Print

The Topeka Public Library is the fourth winner of G. K. Hall's annual Large Print Community Service Award. The award, including a check for $1,000 to expand the library's large print collection, was presented to Jean Tevis and staff of Topeka's "Red Carpet Service" at a reception during the annual ALA convention in San Francisco.

Topeka's winning entry was put together by volunteers and staff members. In the library, patrons can find "Red Carpet Service" at the Low Vision Center, where trained volunteers provide personalized attention to patrons selecting large print books or using visual aids. The "Red Carpet Service" includes a van designed for transporting books and other materials from the Low Vision Center to nursing homes, senior centers and individuals, and uses such slogans as "We'll roll out the Red Carpet for you." (Exchange, August 1987)

Literacy Limelights

Literacy Limelights is a new Kansas State Library newsletter which will highlight key information on Project Literacy U.S. (PLUS) news, local literacy task forces, developments in Washington at the federal level, grants, and action within the state. It will help Kansas literacy supporters to know what their neighbors are doing in other states as well as in their own. It will also recognize special Kansans who are outstanding in their devotion to upgrading literacy standards in their own communities. (Kansas Libraries, July 1987)

Humanities Award to KLA

The Kansas Library Association State Steering Committee for the Humanities in Libraries received the Kansas Committee for the Humanities' Public Humanities Award in the organizational category.

The KLA Committee, chaired by Roger Carswell of Emporia Public Library, "has made a significant contribution to the cultural life of Kansas by promoting humanities programming in the state's libraries," through traveling exhibits such as "Einstein: Image and Impact" and "Kansas: A State of Mind," and the "Let's Talk About It"

program, which has reached over 900 Kansans. (SCKLS Sun, May 1987)

Patron Health Information Base

The public will be reaping the benefits from a Kansas Library Network Board grant that will enable Kansas librarians to be more responsive to patron's questions about health.

A $20,000 grant will pay for development of a workshop series and manual, containing such information as recommended collection material, toll-free consumer health information phone numbers, key directories of state and national health agencies, information providers, and other resources.

The workshops—aimed primarily at resource librarians—will present reference interview techniques, legal and ethical considerations, referral strategies, and health information resource information. (Catalyst, June 1987)

Montana

Bear Creek Builds on Blacktail

In April the Montana Library Commission went into retreat near Helena to examine many issues during its biennial planning process. The result is a newly written mission statement, called Bear Creek.

Blacktail, the previous mission statement, was written in 1985 and focused on library development issues, while the 1987 Bear Creek Mission Statement builds on Blacktail recognizing difficult economic times and encourages providing basic library services. It stresses the need for library service continuing to be free, supports federations, fosters examination of Montana library laws, restates commitment to institutional services, and supports aid for libraries.

Bear Creek restates commitment to library development and encourages initiatives in literacy, collection development and management, support for a White House conference, multi-type cooperation, advocacy for libraries and interlibrary loan service. Since the original draft, a statement has been added emphasizing the importance and need for strong school library media accreditation standards. (Montana State Library News, May/June 1987)

Rapid Document Delivery Project

Based on a proposal by Bruce Morton (MSU), the Northwest Land Grant Universities Rapid Document Delivery Project, State 1, funded as a LIRN project by the Fred Meyer Charitable Trust, is testing use of optical scanning technology for rapid library document delivery. The libraries of MSU, U. of Alaska-Fairbanks, U. of Idaho, Washington State U. and Oregon State U. are participants.

Main Project objectives are: 1) rapid textual and quality graphic information to users, 2) using IBM PC compatible microcomputer technology, 3) in as many ILL-related activities as possible. Equipment and software include Zenith 200 microcomputers with 2 40mb internal hard disks; Zenith monitors; Paradise graphics cards; 2400 baud Datacom modems; Datacopy scanners; Canon laser printers; Word Image Processing System; PC Talk; dBase III record management system.

Varying levels of computer literacy and technical support at participating libraries and finding a communications network that would support 2400 baud transmission at an affordable cost were problems.

Equipment is also used for automated record-keeping, word processing, electronic mail, Dialorders and ILL verification on DIALOG, and to collect and report statistics. (Library Focus, June 1987)

Nebraska

Library Expo: Learning for Life

The 1987 National Library Week had its "lift off" in Omaha with a "Library Expo: Learning for Life" at the Regency Fashion Court. The Expo was sponsored by the Metro Omaha National Library Week Committee. Expo activities, using the theme, "Libraries: Learning for Life," emphasized the wide variety of learning opportunities and information services available from the metropolitan Omaha area libraries.

Demonstrations of the Winnebago online catalog, an electronic encyclopedia, and DIALOG database searching were popular attractions. Printed topical bibliographies were handed out at the Reader's Advisors Desk. This desk, fashioned after Lucy's psychiatrist's booth of Peanuts fame, in which the "Reader Is In," was covered continuously by the perky, green Bookworm with assistance from volunteer area librarians.

Posters and displays of the services of academic, public, school, and special libraries in metro Omaha drew the interest of the adults. Regional and state services were displayed by the Eastern Library System and the Nebraska Library Commission and its Library for the Blind and Handicapped. The youngsters were attracted to the storytelling sessions, the Walking Book, the clowns, and many balloons everywhere. (News Release)

Nebraskans for Libraries

Nebraskans for Libraries is a political action committee dedicated to improving library service in Nebraska by bringing library concerns and issues to the attention of policymakers and legislators. Members are urged to become involved in local library boards and foundations, talk with local and state representatives about the importance of libraries, and to be a library supporter in their communities.

Nebraskans for Libraries has initiated a "Centennial Club" for NLA members who contribute $100 to the PAC within a two-year period. Club members will be recognized with a special emblem which they will be encouraged to wear at all library functions, and they will be listed in NLAQ. NLA members who contribute $10 or more receive a "Get Thee Behind Thy Library" button. (Overtones, June 1987)

Nevada

CLSI Streamer System Saves Time

The Elko County Library is presently converting their CLSI discs to the CLSI Streamer Tape System. This will shorten the length of time needed to do "set copy" from 90 minutes to about 25 minutes each day, reports Carol Madsen, Assistant Library Director and Head of the Computer Department. It also eliminates the need to move and store the heavy disc packs.

The Elko County Library Computer System serves libraries of their own system, Eureka, Lander, and Elko counties and also the libraries of Northern Nevada Community College, Humboldt, and White Pine counties in Nevada. (News Release)

Elko Joins Top Fifty

Hailie Gunn, Director of the Elko County Library System, reports they have received a letter from Herbert Goldhor, Director of the Graduate School of Library and Information Sciences at the University of Illinois, Urbana, advising them they are included on a list of the top fifty libraries in the nation. North Dakota

State Library Offers PC Troubleshooting Assistance

According to current management literature, a major factor in the successful implementation of a new computer system is the availability of a person willing to help users diagnose and resolve hardware or software problems as they occur.

Timely intervention can come either from the neighboring desk or by phone. Since 1984, the State Library Consultant's Office has provided this service for many library staffs across the state, beginning with the first 17 Easylink sites, in July, 1984, and continuing currently with support for 33 Easylink sites, which include multiple microcomputers of different types and configurations. Approximately 90 percent of the incoming questions from library staff are resolvable by phone.

North Dakota's librarians have been encouraged to call the consultant's office as soon as possible after a problem occurs. (Flickertale Newsletter, July 1987)

Pat Harris New State Librarian

Patricia (Pat) Harris has been appointed as the new State Librarian for North Dakota.

Pat comes from the Virginia State Library where she was the assistant director for library development. She has also worked at the state libraries of Louisiana and Ohio in consultant positions. She is a graduate of Louisiana State University's School of Library and Information Science. (Flickertale Newsletter, July 1987).

Friends of Libraries USA Honor Augustana

The Augustana College Library Associates have been named the outstanding academic library support group in the nation by the Friends of Libraries U.S.A. This annual award is given to a college or university library volunteer association with an outstanding record of service for the year.

The Augustana Library Associates increased its membership by over 80% this year and sponsored a varied series of cultural events, including a lecture by historian Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

The organization was formed in 1983 with a dual purpose: to provide financial support to improve Augustana's Mikkelsen Library, and to promote the cultural and artistic growth of Sioux Falls by sponsoring presentations by noted regional and national authors. Upcoming Library Associates events include a lecture-workshop by playwright Edward Albee on October 15, 1987. (News Release)

Utah

Reading Grant to ULA

The National Endowment for the Humanities has awarded the Utah Library Association $136,350 to promote reading and discussion through a new project combining three existing programs previously funded by the NEH.

The grant is to be used for The Book Group: Exploring Literature in Company, a project combining Let's Talk About It, Books Alive and Thinking Out Loud.

Existing packages from Books Alive and Let's Talk About It will be utilized along with new packages in the program. The packages consist of books, study guides and other materials on a variety of themes including contemporary racial and family issues, children's literature and Utah culture.

Added to these packages will be audio tapes taken from a concept developed through "Thinking Out Loud," a monthly radio program focusing on contemporary and historical social issues from medical ethics to Egyptian archeology.

Tapes from the broadcasts will be available with packages to offer "the benefits of scholarly input to groups meeting in communities far from Utah's colleges and other cultural resources.

Following the project, the study guides and tapes will be available for use nationwide. (Salt Lake Tribune, May 17, 1987)

Russell L. Davis

Russell L. Davis to Retire

On May 4, 1987, Russell L. Davis, Utah's first and only State Librarian, announced to the State Library staff that he intended to retire sometime between July and September 1987.

Appointed in 1957, Mr. Davis operated the State Library out of the back seat of his car until the State of Utah arranged a location for the State Library and its staff. That initial location was in the third floor bedroom of what is now the Governor's Mansion. The State Library eventually was housed in the Carriage House on the Mansion's grounds and moved to its present location in April 1967.

In the almost 30 years Mr. Davis has been Director of the State Library, the staff has grown from three to approximately 85, with a headquarters staff in Salt Lake City and with field services staff at 14 locations throughout Utah serving as bookmobile headquarters.

Highlights of Mr. Davis' career include the bookmobile demonstration project and the first bookmobile service in 1958. In 1961, service to the blind and physically handicapped was transferred to the State Library from the Salt Lake City Public Library.

In 1970, the film lending library was established with 425 films. In 1971, a catalog of the major Utah library holdings was begun.

In 1974, Utah was made the Multi-state Center for the West, serving 15 western state regional libraries for the blind and physically handicapped. In 1976, the radio reading service for the blind was instituted, the Bicentennial Bookmobile started its 17-month tour of the state, and automation arrived at the State Library with OCLC in Technical Services and METRO in Reference.

In 1981, a planning conference was held on Bibliographic Access and Resource Sharing in Utah, the State Library's Mission and Goals Statement was adopted by the State Library Board, and the preliminary draft of the Utah Plan for Library and Information Services was completed. In 1982, the Utah Plan was adopted and the State Library celebrated its 25th anniversary: "From Horse Stable to On-Line Cable: 25 Years of Progress!"

Mr. Davis has served as President of MPLA and BCR, as well as Chair of the Western Council of State Libraries and the Utah College Library Council. He received the Distinguished Service Award of the Utah Library Association in 1974. (Horsefeathers)

Scientists Donating Papers to U. Library Archives

An effort to document Utah's scientific contributions by collecting papers and oral histories from noted Utah scientists is gaining momentum, say officials of the University of Utah Marriott Library.

The Utah Science, Engineering and Medical Archives now has commitments from 34 scientists to donate their papers and has attracted more than $100,000 in university and private support.

The archives were launched about four years ago after famed Utah scientist Henry L. Eyring's papers were donated to the library. The primary objective of the archives is to document the Utah connection in the history of U.S. and world science. (Salt Lake Tribune, June 7, 1987)

Wyoming

Large Print Catalog Prepared

A new Large Print Book catalog from the Wyoming State Library will appear in two volumes. Volume one covers mysteries, romance and westerns, and volume two has historical, non-fiction and miscellaneous books. All books are considered recreational reading and no textbooks are listed.

Listings are alphabetical by author and each entry is annotated. Approximately 4,000 books are entered in 600 pages. Four sheets of postcards are included to assist patrons with ordering.

Patrons selected their reading material from the catalog and books were mailed to them directly in specially designed boxes. Books are returned by mail, postage-free.

The catalog was prepared using computer entry of data. The data tape was then sent to Comco Systems, Inc. of California, a company that specializes in this type of catalog. (The Outrider, May-June 1987)

Two Libraries Go Live with Circ

Two additional phase 1 libraries recently went live with the Geac automated circulation system. Laramie County Library System and Casper College Library began using the circulation system the first week in June.

Both libraries have already been using the Geac system for data input of bibliographic records, GEM and inter-library loan. By going live with circulation, both will now have access to the full range of computer activities available through the Wyoming State Library.

Ed Byers, director of the Laramie County Library System, said that extensive coverage by local media assisted in making the community aware of the new system. "It made the community aware of the need for re-registration of patron library cards and it let the community know that the library was going to be shut down for three days to finalize going on the system," Byers said.

Lynnette Anderson, director of the Casper College Library, indicated that part of their preparation for the shift involved visits to the Platte County and Laramie County Community College for indepth show and tell of their systems in operation. (The Outrider, May-June 1987)
